

Close in tackling is bruising and requires physical hardiness. Tacklers should remember to tackle low and hard. The harder the tackle the more likely the opponent is to fumble the ball.

Urges Farmers To Hold Known Wheat Varieties

Lafayette—At this season of the year when farmers are making plans for next year's wheat crop serious consideration should be given to the selection of adapted wheat varieties as well as to proper seed cleaning before planting. M. O. Pence, soils expert of Purdue has said. Many new wheats were brought into Indiana last year, according to information coming to the Soils and Crops Department of Purdue University, and farmers are urged to use caution in the selection of varieties which have no record of performance, except during the past favorable season, in preference to tried and tested varieties. These newly introduced wheats may or may not be as suitable as our standard varieties which have given consistently high yields.

Some of these new wheats are apparently standard varieties grown under different names in other states. This situation will no doubt add to the confusion of growers in selecting better varieties. Before paying high premiums for these new wheats it would be well for farmers to consider varieties of known origin and proven performance. Under the favorable conditions for wheat during the past winter no determination of winter hardiness could be made of these new wheats. Varieties which have given good average yields year in and year out under Indiana conditions are to be preferred to those which yield high in good seasons and very low under unfavorable conditions. There promises to be a good supply of seed wheat of fair quality of the standard soft wheat varieties recommended for Indiana such as Michigan Amber, Trumbull, Fultz, all smooth wheats, and Ruby and Gladden, bearded wheats. If any of these varieties are desired but unavailable in any locality the soils and crops department will be glad to assist in their location.

For farmers who wish to buy seed wheat of the highest purity and germination, as well as practically free from insect and disease, and to have American business women visit there.

"We heard much of Briand's 'United States of Europe,'" said Miss Kennedy. "This," she said, "is naturally favored by some and opposed by many, but worthy of consideration."

"We found only friendliness for the United States and its business and professional women especially," said Miss Kennedy.

While in London, a number of the party had luncheon with Ambassador and Mrs. Charles G. Dawes.

Memphis, Tenn.—Mrs. Emma Knoll a 79-year-old shoe cobbler's wife, and Jeffersonville, have steadily served millions of river commuters and have, notwithstanding the advancing methods of transportation, continued to efficiently serve the motor and pedestrian traffic between Southern Indiana and Louisville.

The ferry service now stands at a point of either suspension or continuance. As to the future, the owners and controllers of the Ferry Company look to the people of this community to decide.

"We founded the ferry company, in the beginning" Mr. Rose said today "to establish a means of transportation between the two cities. We did not think, then, of making a large financial return from it, but hoped only to furnish a means for pedestrians and vehicles to cross the Ohio river. The Company has endeavored to serve the people efficiently, and the investment has repaid the owners for their efforts to establish that service. As to the future, it will depend entirely upon the people of Jeffersonville.
